
Emergency Parenting Assistance - It's in the Bag!

954 words (3 sidebars)

Emergency parenting assistance is needed - and now it's here! I have written an article that describes how your readers can spend just 20 minutes putting together a bag of "parenting essentials", which will save hours of frustration and earn them the praise of their little ones. This idea is perfect for new moms, seasoned pros and even grandparents!

Make Tonight a Family Game Night

827 words (1 sidebar)

Childcare experts will tell you that almost all children enjoy rituals, routines, schedules they can count on. As parents we apply this principle to bedtimes and getting ready for school, but how about adding a fun twist? Why not create a new ritual called, Family Game Night? This article will demonstrate all that is learned over a simple game of "Sorry", and includes an interview with Stacy Debroff, author of two parenting books and CEO of Momcentral.com.

Raising a Giver

1,209 words (no sidebars)

This article provides ideas for 10 unique gifts kids can make for their family and friends. These gifts can be adapted for a toddler to create with scribbles, or a third-grader with meticulous detail, with both creations reflecting the wonderful characteristics of their particular age.

Getting Kids Out of the House and Back Into Nature

1,059 words (with one sidebar)

A study released this year by the University of Illinois, points to America's shift away from nature. To combat this trend, I've interviewed the experts and come up with a laundry-list of ways that parents can get kids interested in the great outdoors. Your readers may already enjoy night hikes and gardening, but do they know about fairy houses, letterboxing and "hammock time?" They will after they read, "Getting Kids Out of the House and Back Into Nature."

Boredom Busters

623 words (no sidebars)

This article is perfect for those days that the weather keeps kids inside and they've simply run out of things to do. Arm your readers with these "boredom busters" for on-the-spot fun!
